

Ann KERRIDGE (1827-?)

Ann was aged 30, single, literate, a Baptist and a cook from Suffolk when migrating on the 'Trade Wind' which arrived in Tasmania in 1858. She was discharged from the Quarantine Station at Impression Bay on her own account on the evening of 13 May 1858. Her sponsor, William Rout (1790-1868) of Hobart Town, arrived in Tasmania about 1828. For many years he was engaged in the ironmongery business. Rout was a director of the Bank of VDL, of the TSN Co., and of the Gas Company; one of the managers of the Savings Bank and was identified with various other public establishments. He was well known for contributing funds to charitable institutions. His wife was matron of the convict ship for females, 'Anson' and was afterwards employed by the Government as matron of an asylum for women.

It is likely Ann was the daughter of William Kerridge (1787-1855) a woodman born at Thelnetham, Suffolk and Jemima nee Hurrell (1793-1873), born Wattisfield Suffolk. In the 1851 England census for Stanton All Saints, Suffolk, Ann was aged 22, born Stanton. It is likely Ellen, who was under one month old and recorded as a 'bastard' was Ann's daughter. Ellen Pettit Kerridge was born March 1851 at Stanton. The father was not named on the birth registration. In the 1861 England Census for Stanton, Thingoe, Suffolk, Jemima was a widow, aged 74, and a pauper. Ellen Kerridge, her granddaughter was also living with her; she was aged 10 and a scholar.

Ann married John Burrows (1830-?), another passenger on the 'Trade Wind' at St John's Church, Newtown on 28 July 1858. John was a fellmonger.
